A recent report states that there are two Japanese divisions near Mukden, intending to intercept General Kurokawa when he retreats.

Several fighting has taken place on the northern bank of Port Arthur, the Japanese casualties numbering 146.

The Japanese on Monday captured Kai-chau, or Kai-chow, and advanced to Tsing-tau, about 100 miles before them.

After destroying several miles of railway, the Japanese re-embarked at Kai-chau and proceeded southwards.

The railway has been cut in five places north of Port Arthur.

The Japanese advance south of Liao-yang has been held for two days waiting for heavy artillery, which was retarded owing to the bad roads.

A message from General Kurokawa says the Japanese advance is less rapid than has been stated by others.

Thousands of Russians have re-entered Manchuria, and intend to burn the gunboat Hwang-ho if the Japanese approach.

Both sides of the United States have given a hope that Russia will respect Chinese neutrality in Manchuria.

On Wednesday six heavy bombardments were heard at Port Arthur, suggesting that the Japanese were trying to destroy the ships and docks.

Buster states that the Russians destroyed all the buildings at Port Arthur.

It is the House of Commons, Mr. Black's motion calling for an anti-protectionist policy, and the Government was negative to it.

The text of the Pope's protest against President Loubet visiting the Quirinal before going to the Vatican has aroused great indignation in Italy.

Insurgents have destroyed 17 villages in the Sasun district, and 400 Armenian families have taken refuge at Musch.

A convoy has arrived at Gyantse with supplies and ammunition for the British troops in three months.

The Governor-General and Lady Northcote paid a visit to Katomena yesterday.

In the Senate yesterday, the Capital Bills was read the first time.

A motion was carried affirming that ironworks may be established and owned by the Government.

A select committee was appointed to inquire into means of providing old age pension by the establishment of a Government pension fund in tobacco.

A select committee was appointed to inquire into the administration of the Electoral Act.

The Deakin census yesterday expressed its desire that Mr. Deakin and Sir George Turner for their efforts to bring about better political conditions.

It has resolved not to consider proposals for a coalition, except on condition that the Prime Ministerial is held by Mr. Deakin.

Mr. Reid intends to submit these results to a meeting of the Free-trade party today and says he will leave the matter in his hands.

He pointed out, however, that what the Labour census asks for is the rule of the minority in the proposed coalition.

Deakin made a speech on the political attitude he had last night, justifying the attitude he had taken.

He said that the declaration of a truce on the fiscal question was in accordance with the spirit of the last election.

He also said that the Labour party had never on a single critical occasion voted solidly with the Government.

Furthermore, he had been impressed with the spirit of the new three-party system, and had resolved to change it.

The polling for the Riverina election so far gives Mr. Chesser a majority of 441.

The Full Court has ordered a new trial in the case of Mr. Watson, on the ground of excessive damages (2,800).

The Court dismissed the appeal of the defendant in Goldring v. Lockyer, holding that the issue lodged by plaintiff was correct.

A varied collection of live stock is being shipped to the Philippines to-day by the Chinaman.

The State Labour party intends to hold a further meeting to consider Ministerial interference in a magistracy.

Mr. Carruthers again made some strong statements upon the alleged Ministerial interference with the administration of justice.

The correspondence between Mr. Mahon and Mr. Outram in reference to the recognition of the autonomy of postal employees was very interesting.

Mr. Outram contended that the association would result in continual friction, and that he had never made an unsound representation to his officers.

Correspondence shows that Mr. Watson has successfully endeavoured to get the opinion of the Cabinet regarding the Trans-australian railway.

Mr. Jenkins insists that the survey shall be made and proper estimates supplied before South Australia takes action.

A public meeting at Adelaide has urged that a committee be formed to secure navigation on the Murray.

It also urged that proceedings at law should be commenced at once to restrain New South Wales and Victoria from carrying out diversions.

In reply to a request by the railway associations, 21 members of the Federal Parliament have so far declared their approval of arbitration for railway men.

The Legislative Council of Tasmania has passed the Governor's Bill (No. 1), covering the reductions made by the Assembly.

Mr. Carruthers arrived at Wellington yesterday. It is considered that the Federal Parliament has an excellent chance of winning the seat.

At Orange, however, Dr. Ross and Mr. Newson are still quiet, and the feeling is that they will be in jeopardy if one of them does not retire.

Three members of Parliament are contesting their seats—Messrs. W. W. Davis, Heath, and Smith.

Mr. Wardell says that at the present time the Government has a net financial balance of £1,500,000.

A terrible cyclone has occurred at Daru. New South Wales is the only state that the cyclone has not yet visited.

The Local Government's steamer Aparima, from Sydney, has arrived, and grave fears are entertained for her safety.

The Education Department publishes details of a reform scheme. It provides for numerous scholarships in the new schools to be established.

The Legislative Council of Tasmania has passed the Governor's Bill (No. 1), covering the reductions made by the Assembly.

Mr. Carruthers arrived at Wellington yesterday. It is considered that the Federal Parliament has an excellent chance of winning the seat.

He hopes to get the consolidated revenue and loan accounts balanced, and then to have a budget in Sydney.

A terrible cyclone has occurred at Daru. New South Wales is the only state that the cyclone has not yet visited.

The Local Government's steamer Aparima, from Sydney, has arrived, and grave fears are entertained for her safety.

The Mining market was also quiet, and generally featureless.

No improvement of the depressed conditions takes place in the import markets.

ON THE LAND.

FARM AND STATION.

THE PESTIVE BROGLIA.

The broglia, native companion, or toll, grey-headed crane, is a giddy reveler in its frivolous moments, while it foraging in quest of a relentless murderer, hunting in flocks, a robbing man with the cunning of a master thief. The season is at hand when the grey hots emerge at sunrise from the edges of the timbered land, shaking out their tall feathers and smoothing their gleaming wings on their long bills. In tones akin to the harsh complainings of the rook, the toll, the broglia and their compadres gay-wheel the capons and their partners together, and the supports for the toll, the toll, there are a few sudden, short flights, and then the birds begin to dance. The actions of the broglia are a strange mixture of grace and ungainliness. Their march is stately, but they seem to partake of the gait prancing through a quadrille, the effect of which is to make them look like a farce. A large bird will howl to let us know, coming in an erect position, that he will be a bird of two-legged canter, then jump and stick out one leg as stiff as a poker, alighting, he begins bowing again, and next advances to move another exactly as one would see a girl at a country dance advanced up the centre. In an inconsequential manner, the toll, the broglia and their partners, bowing and twisting all over the place, until at last the captain will leap up, and will march on sedately, suddenly a youngster on the outskirts will challenge another to a bowing and capering exhibition, and more will join in, while others break on with a wooden, bony sort of express.

The best time to see the broglia's dance is now, but they may perform at any time.

If you creep down to the edge of a plain, armed with a rifle, the birds will walk away, provided they are at what they consider a safe distance. As they walk you may fire a shot, and shortly afterwards they will return.

The toll, the broglia and their partners, when a bird has been shot, will sit around, looking at the dead bird, and when a member of a rifle club is shooting the ammunition supplied by the State for the target at the farmer's home he comes with the knowledge that it is much the better practice for bear shooting. You let fly at 400 yards, and the toll, the broglia and their partners, perhaps 20 rods on the other side of the hill.

You lower the sight a little, and prepare to plump a bullet right into the crowd. But the crowd has moved on, and the next projectile drops 20 or perhaps 50 yards on your own side.

Shooting broglia with a rifle is grand sport, if the toll, the broglia and their partners, have not been made.

The writer has known the twentieth bullet fired at a flock go clean through two broglia, and on another occasion the first bullet fired passed through a bird's neck.

One day I broke a wing, and the poor bird was in a great pain after the other feathers were plucked off. A bullet shot into it, and when they worked it over it was found to be a bullet hole.

It is a confused heap of feathers.

THE COMING OF THE KING.

BY JOSEPH HOCKING.

[ALL RIGHTS RESERVED.]

CHAPTER XXI.—Continued.

What would have happened I know not, for at that moment the crowd was much excited, and the King, who had been silent, was shouting for Mistress Constance, whereupon he spoke angrily to him, and bade him be silent. He obeyed like a child, for so much had we both been moved by the sight of the King, to take note of the tones of my voice, and to come at my call as a well trained spaniel.

"What are you going to do with me?" I said, as I turned to him again.

"To take you to gaol, young master."

"Why? What charge have you against me?"

"We'll see to that to-morrow morning at the County Court," was the reply.

"Then let my horse be taken to the Bull and Bush Inn, and even then I could not bear for him to suffer the loss of my coat."

"Ay, and who's to take him?" was the reply.

There was a strange procession as ever man saw, as we walked towards the river; for although my cap still held me fast, I placed his head near me, his eyes flashing dangerously, and I could see that he was about to snap his head and snort dangerously.

"When called the Bull we stopped."

"Call the constable," I said as though I were in command, and as I turned to him, a few seconds later Black Ben allowed himself to be led into the stables.

By this time a greater crowd than ever had gathered, and as I turned to him again, the whole town had turned out to see us. This vexed me much for I hated the thought that many a hand would be laid upon my shoulders.

"But Mistress Constance seemed all the time to walk along the street and over the bridge with head erect, and the faraway look in her eyes as when I had seen her first of all that night."

We were kept near to each other, so near in truth that I could have touched her had she not been free, but she did not seem to heed me.

"Do not fear," I said to her.

"We shall be safe—myself and you," she replied.

"But she shook her head, and after that we spoke no more, for I had no time to talk for a few minutes later I found myself in a dark dungeon of a place, where there was neither light to see nor fresh air to breathe."

I will not try to set down here the thoughts and feelings of the two of us, for they were indeed very strong, but I will say this.

Indeed, there will be no need to relate them, even if I fell inclined to do so. All read this will know that the King was my master.

"But she shook her head, and after that we spoke no more, for I had no time to talk for a few minutes later I found myself in a dark dungeon of a place, where there was neither light to see nor fresh air to breathe."

The Chief Justice, I said again, as though I were in command, and as I turned to him, a few seconds later Black Ben allowed himself to be led into the stables.

THE ROYAL NAVAL RESERVE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD.

Sir.—You recently published an extract from the regulations governing the entry of Australian and New Zealanders into the Royal Naval Reserve of 1903, and I now write a corresponding extract from the regulations for the enrolment, training, pay, etc., of Australian and New Zealanders in the Australian and New Zealand Naval Forces.

Mr. J. Bullen presided at the opening ceremony, and the King, who had been invited to speak, did not appear. The King's speech was delivered by Mr. J. Russell Jones to the audience. The various members of the crew, who were of a mixed character, were of useful and unuseful character in the evening the attendance was large, and an interesting programme of music, conjuring, etc., was carried on.

Yesterday afternoon a sale of work was opened in the Commissariat barracks, King's Cross, Liverpool, which was arranged by Miss Anna J. Penfold and a number of ladies of the Royal Naval Reserve.
